The FCS advisor will work with human development and family science students to ensure a smooth transition as we move from a sequence to a degree program. Although this change will eliminate the consumer sciences sequence of the program, there are currently no students enrolled in the program and no faculty employed in that disciplinary area.

6. What is the anticipated budget effect?

No budget effect. Although the curriculum of the new degree program has been updated, there is no increase in credit hour requirements and we anticipate no change in enrollments.
